

Dear Potential Sponsor;

Fairy tales and dreams make us believe high school baseball players tryout for the team, make the team, start every game, get voted the number one player in the county, have colleges lined at every practice and game, sign a full scholarship, get drafted, and play 20 years for the Yankees. While this is the dream for all of us, it's certainly more of a fairy tale for nearly everyone.

The reality of high school baseball is, times have certainly changed. Mostly due to economics, college coaches simply do not have the budget to travel during the spring season. Plus, all colleges have their own playing schedule while the high school teams are playing. Along with instilling sportsmanship and fundamentals, mostly they're paid to win. So, who's responsible for alerting and advising the college coaches, and in some cases, the pro scouts of a player and his ability? This is where the staff at the South Florida Elite Squad Baseball program come in to play.

In the past 4 years, this organization, South Florida Elite Squad, has been able to help over 100 players further their baseball careers by receiving college scholarships. This was done by the exposure they were given in attending several summer baseball tournaments such as East Cobb, Georgia. In attending this event, all players are required to contribute towards the expenses that the team incurs through out the course of the summer and fall seasons so that they are exposed and developed to become better people and better baseball players. Unfortunately, the fees paid by the players aren't enough to help the organization grow and expose these young men more than what we've been able to achieve. Because of the cost of uniforms, field rentals, umpires, insurance, and the very costly expense of traveling throughout the country, requires a player to spend a significant amount of money to be able to have this once in a lifetime experience, to assist them in the process of reaching their goals. Only through the support of the community, through either donations, or advertising sponsorships from a company like yours, can I, an active player in the Elite Squad Organization, continue to realize my potential.

By your company providing a monetary donation, I can fundraise to make sure that I can attend all tournaments that I need to be exposed and presented to these top colleges. By contributing towards my player fee obligations for travel, you are helping me as a baseball player immeasurably. I do hope you can make this request possible; you would be making an impact, one baseball player at a time. Thank you.

Sincerely,

South Florida Elite Squad
